5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Finally! Some juice is back in this Red Sox – Yankees rivalry. The Sox will play at Yankee Stadium for the first time this season tonight as they start a three-game series with their hated rivals. The Yankees have some loathsome characters again, which makes these games so much more fun. Tyler Austin has that entitled, trust fund baby face you'd just love to punch (you're one step ahead, Joe Kelly), and their manager is now Aaron "Bleepin'" Boone of all people. It also helps that these two have the best records in baseball right now. Read more on page 12 and at metroboston.us.

FAMILIES CROSSING BORDER WILL NOW BE SEPARATED

1 The administration of President Donald Trump will increase criminal prosecutions of parents entering the United States illegally and place their children in protective custody as part of efforts to tighten immigration enforcement, according to a Department of Homeland Security (DHS) official. The policy formalizes plans that have been under discussion for more than a year. Shortly after Trump took office, pledging a hard line against illegal immigration, border arrests fell. Apprehensions, however, are again on the rise and reaching levels seen during the administration of former President Barack Obama, frustrating Trump. Under the new policy, parents caught crossing the border illegally will both be separated from their children and criminally prosecuted. "Those apprehended will be sent directly to federal court under the custody of the U.S. Marshals Service, and their children will be transferred to the custody of Health and Human Services," the DHS official said in an email. In remarks released Monday, Attorney General Jeff Sessions said, "If you are smuggling a child, then we will prosecute you and that child will be separated from you as required by law."

TRUMP TO ANNOUNCE IRAN DECISION ON TUESDAY

2 President Donald Trump said he would announce a decision on the future of the Iran nuclear deal on Tuesday as European countries piled pressure on Washington to remain in the 2015 agreement. Trump has threatened to withdraw from the deal, which provided Iran with relief from economic sanctions in exchange for limiting its uranium enrichment capacity, unless European signatories to the accord fix what he has called its shortcomings. "I will be announcing my decision on the Iran Deal tomorrow from the White House at 2:00pm," Trump said in a Twitter post on Monday. Trump has until May 12 to decide whether to reintroduce U.S. sanctions on Iran, which would deal a heavy blow to the agreement. Under the agreement with the United States, France, Germany, Britain, Russia and China, Iran strictly limited uranium enrichment capacity to try to show that it was not trying to develop atomic bombs. In exchange, Iran received relief from economic sanctions. Iranian President Hassan Rouhani hinted on Monday that Iran could remain in the accord even if the U.S. dropped out, but said that Tehran would resist U.S. pressure to limit its influence in the Middle East.

US EMBASSY ROAD SIGNS GO UP IN JERUSALEM

4 U.S. Embassy road signs went up in Jerusalem on Monday before next week's opening of the mission in accordance with President Donald Trump's recognition of the city as Israel's capital. Trump says he is making good on U.S. legislation and presidential pledges dating back decades. Other world powers have not done so, sidestepping one of the thorniest disputes between Israel and the Palestinians, who want their own state with East Jerusalem as the capital. Workmen installed the signs, in English, Hebrew and Arabic, along roads leading to a U.S. consulate building in Jerusalem that will be remodeled as the embassy when it is formally relocated from Tel Aviv on May 14. "This is not a dream. It is reality. I am proud and moved to have hung this morning the first new signs that were prepared for the U.S. Embassy," Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat wrote on Twitter. Israel captured East Jerusalem from Jordanian control in the 1967 Middle East war and annexed it in a move not recognized internationally. "This [embassy] move is not only illegal but will also thwart the achievement of a just and lasting peace ..." Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat said in a statement.

MASS ALLOWS WYNN TO REMOVE NAME ON LICENSE

5 Massachusetts' gambling regulator on Monday said it will allow Wynn Resorts Ltd. to remove founder Steve Wynn's name from its license for a planned $2.5 billion casino following allegations that Wynn subjected women who worked for him to unwanted sexual advances. The Massachusetts Gaming Commission's decision came as state regulators investigate the allegations as part of a process that could affect whether Wynn Resorts continues to be deemed suitable to retain its 2014 casino license. The five-member commission ruled that Wynn no longer be considered a "qualifier" for the purposes of its license upon confirmation that he did not exercise voting rights at the company's upcoming May 16 shareholders' meeting. Qualifiers, who must pass a state background check, can include top executives and shareholders. The commission can factor in character, reputation and integrity to determine if a casino operator is suitable to hold a license. "We are pleased with the Gaming Commission's decision and look forward to having nothing further to do with this matter," Brian Kelley, a lawyer for Wynn at the law firm Nixon Peabody, said in a statement.

This Massachusetts company wants to store your healthy cells for future use

GoodCell in Natick lets you store your stem cells, DNA and blood plasma to help you stay healthy as you age, like a DNA kit with extra benefits.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Trevor Perry knows that he'll probably develop Alzheimer's as he gets older. It's one of the reasons he co-founded a new biotech company, called GoodCell, that keeps your healthy cells safe for the future.

Two of his grandparents — one on each side — have the progressive disease. So, when those DNA tests that can identify your health risks first came out, Perry took them all. Being in the biotech industry, he wanted to take more control over his own health.

From his results, Perry knew an Alzheimer's diagnosis in his future was likely. But he wasn't satisfied with just knowing. After taking those tests, he asked himself, "What can I do now?"

The answer: keep his currently healthy cells in a safe place so that he can use them as a marker of his own aging.

"As time progresses and I get older, I can look at the biomarkers that we do know are associated with Alzheimer's, [and see] is there a change that's happened?" he said. "I feel a lot better knowing that I have this because when I'm 60, 65, every single year, I'll be drawing a tube of blood and seeing what's changed."

That's not the only benefit of keeping his cells. Scientists are developing Alzheimer's treatments — and treatments for other diseases, from cancer to Parkinson's to diabetes — that use stem cells. Using your own cells from when they were healthiest, before those disease mutations appeared, can help your body heal.

"We want to be able to help people age healthier. Not necessarily live longer, but live healthier."
Trevor Perry

GoodCell, which Perry co-founded with Brad Hamilton, is headquartered in Natick and aims to bring this option of storing your healthy cells for future use to anyone.

Think 23andMe, but with some added steps: Customers can order a kit from the GoodCell website and set up an appointment with a phlebotomist who comes to your home or office to take your blood. That kit is sent to GoodCell's FDA-approved lab in New Brunswick, New Jersey, where the DNA, blood plasma and stem cells are analyzed and safely stored for the future.

"When I did [a DNA test] I found out some great information, and that was fun, but what value does it have for me in the long term?" Perry said. "Value is in the peace of mind, being able to know more about your aging and to age healthier."

It's not a cheap service — $995 for the kit, $95 for an annual membership — but does your peace of mind and a potential future, personalized cure have a price tag? To Perry, it's the ultimate self care.

"It's a big mission and big vision, but we really want to change the trajectory of medicine. We want to be able to help people age healthier. Not necessarily live longer, but live healthier," Perry said. "To be able to know how to use your own body, your own cells, to be able to tell how you're aging and to be able to cure yourself when things happen — that'll be a big driver of medicine in the future."

East Boston woman's car stolen with her dog inside

An East Boston woman's car, and her dog that was inside it, were stolen on Sunday, police said.

Rose Nese, a lifelong East Boston resident, told the Boston Globe that the incident occurred around 8:45 a.m. Sunday in the parking lot of an Orient Heights convenience store.

Nese left her 8-year-old yellow lab, Chief, in her car as she ran into in the market. Nese had left the keys in and the air condition running, and then both her vehicle and her pet were gone when she came out just minutes later.

According to surveillance footage obtained by CBS Boston, a white middle-age man wearing a blue jacket, black pants and with a neon yellow or green backpack slung over his shoulder was seen driving off in the car, a white Hyundai Sante Fe.

Harbor Hounds, a dog day care center in East Boston, shared a photo of Chief on its Facebook page on Sunday.

"Today someone stole our client's car in East Boston up in Orient Heights with Chief the yellow lab in it," the post reads. "Chief is beyond friendly and will come if you call him."

The post also noted that Nese's car can be identified by an Italian flag sticker on the back windshield and with the Massachusetts license plate number 6ZG 441.

A nonprofit called Missing Dogs Massachusetts also shared a photo of Chief on Facebook, asking people to share the post. Chief has "severe" allergies, according to that post, and is in need of medication and prescription food.

"I just want him home safe," Nese told the Globe. "He's very lovable, he'll go to anybody, anything, he really doesn't know what harm is. ... He trusts everybody."

A Boston police spokesman confirmed that a police report about the incident was filed on Sunday. There have been no reports since, as of Monday morning, to indicate that the dog or the vehicle have been located yet, police said.

"He's very lovable, he'll go to anybody, anything, he really doesn't know what harm is. ... He trusts everybody."

MIT looking into allegations made against writer Junot Diaz

Writer Junot Diaz previously wrote about experiencing sexual abuse. Now, women are saying they experienced sexual misconduct at his hands.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology is looking into allegations of abuse recently made against writer Junot Diaz, a representative for the university said in a statement.

Diaz is a Dominican-American writer known for his books "This is How You Lose Her" and "The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao," which won the 2008 Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Critics Circle Award. He is also a professor of writing at MIT.

In April, Diaz wrote a story for The New Yorker titled "The Silence: A Legacy of Trauma," in which he talked about his experience being raped as a child, joining the countless stories of sexual abuse shared since the start of the #MeToo movement.

But now, Diaz has found himself on the other side of that movement. Last week, multiple writers took to Twitter to detail the abuse and harassment they say Diaz unleashed on them.

Author Zinzi Clemmons on Thursday said that Diaz, speaking at the school where she was a grad student, cornered and "forcibly" kissed her.

Author Carmen Maria Machado piggybacked on Clemmons' tweet and shared an experience in which she says Diaz verbally assaulted her, yelling at her after she asked about "his protagonist's unhealthy, pathological relationship with women."

"I have no doubt that a lot of stories about him are about to come out, now that the damn [sic] has broken," author Roxane Gay tweeted. "Because there have been whispers for years."

In a statement made through his literary agent to The New York Times, Diaz said "I take responsibility for my past. That is the reason I made the decision to tell the truth of my rape and its damaging aftermath." He did not address any allegations specifically.

Top Massachusetts court clears MIT in student suicide lawsuit

Massachusetts' top court on Monday ruled that MIT cannot be held responsible for not preventing a PhD candidate from killing himself but said universities at times do have a legal duty to prevent student suicides.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court upheld the dismissal of a lawsuit by the father of Han Nguyen, a student who jumped to his death at the age of 25 from the top of an MIT building in 2009.

A lawyer for his father had argued that MIT knew Nguyen was a suicide risk and was negligent in not preventing his death. But the court said the student, who was enrolled in a marketing program, never told MIT employees he planned to commit suicide.

Justice Scott Kafker in the 5-0 ruling wrote that a college or university nonetheless does have a duty to prevent a suicide if it knows a student either has tried to take his or her own life or has stated a plan to do so.

"It is definitely not a generalized duty to prevent suicide," Kafker wrote. "Nonclinicians are also not expected to discern suicidal tendencies where the student has not stated his or her plans or intentions to commit suicide." REUTERS

After suffering a heart attack, Kevin Smith's doctor told him that the weed he smoked earlier may have saved his life. ISTOCK

Can marijuana prevent heart attacks?

Kevin Smith says smoking weed pre-heart attack saved his life.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Writer and director Kevin Smith survived a "widowmaker" heart attack earlier this year — a heart attack that kills 80 percent of people who have one.

How did Smith manage to survive? Weed.

"They got me to the hospital and they wheel me into the emergency room and the whole time I'm chill. Like, the guy said, the paramedic, he goes, 'You're being real calm, that's going to get you through this,'" Smith told Stephen Colbert on May 1.

"And there's a dude behind him [that] goes, 'That's what's going to save his life.' And I'm like, 'What does that part [mean]?'"

Smith was initially worried that all the weed he smoked earlier in the day was the cause of his heart attack, but his doctor said otherwise.

"He said, 'No, quite the opposite. That weed saved your life,'" Smith said.

Can marijuana prevent a heart attack?

Don't go investing all of your health care dollars in marijuana just yet.

A 2002 study from Harvard Medical School and Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston found that smoking weed increases a person's chances of having a heart attack within the first hour of smoking — more than five times that of non-smokers.

The reason: Smoking weed "increases the heart rate by about 40 beats per minute," lead study author Dr. Murray Mittleman, director of cardiovascular epidemiology at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, said at the time.

"It also causes the blood pressure to increase when the person is lying down, and then abruptly fall when the person stands up, often causing dizziness," he added. "These effects may pose significant risk, especially in people with unrecognized coronary disease."

Mittleman added that the role THC — the chemical compound in marijuana that causes the high — plays in the risk is unknown.

What does current research says about marijuana and heart attacks?

The Harvard and Beth Israel study was conducted over 16 years ago — a lifetime when it comes to medical research. Is the link between weed and heart attacks still relevant?

Yes, at least according to a 2017 study from Philadelphia's Einstein Medical Center.

For the study, cardiologist Dr. Aditi Kalla and team analyzed over 20 million medical records from people between 18 and 55 who had been discharged from hospitals in the United States. The team broke the data down to people who admitted to smoking weed before their hospital visit (1.5 percent of patients) and found that these patients were at 26 percent higher risk for stroke and 10 percent higher risk for heart failure than those who didn't smoke weed.

Smith has since lost 30 pounds since his health scare. GETTY IMAGES

"Even when we corrected for known risk factors, we still found a higher rate of both stroke and heart failure in these patients, so that leads us to believe that there is something else going on besides just obesity or diet-related cardiovascular side effects," Kalla said in a press release at the time.

Can anything related to marijuana help your heart?

As Harvard pointed out, marijuana is still considered a Schedule I substance, meaning the federal government views it as having "no currently accepted medical use and a high potential for abuse," making it difficult for in-depth research on its health effects.

That said, research into a derivative from the cannabis plant shows promise when it comes to health.

A 2013 review published in the British Journal of Pharmacology found that cannabidiol (CBD) helped reduce vascular tension in rodents, along cardiomyopathy associated with diabetes.

CBD — found in the seeds, stalks and flowers of cannabis plants — is also shown to have benefits to people with diseases like cancer, colitis and Huntington's disease.

How's Kevin Smith's health now?

Smith has lost over 30 pounds since his heart attack in February — and he plans to lose at least 50 as an ambassador for Weight Watchers.

"This is the weight I was when I met my wife, so this is a good weight to be at. Last time I was at this weight, I scored, big time," he said.

"Smallville" actress Allison Mack is making headlines for the NXIVM scandal. GETTY IMAGES

Two shows are being developed based on the NXIVM scandal

New York Times expose optioned by TV production company as "Smallville" actress freed on bail.

HENRIETTA JONES
letters@metro.us

With celebrity falls from grace dominating news headlines, actress Allison Mack's alleged role in the NXIVM sex slavery scandal looks set to be turned into a TV series. The 2017 New York Times feature on the cult has been optioned by independent TV studio Annapurna Television, according to The Hollywood Reporter.

While no network is attached to the newly announced project, "Westworld" actress Shannon Woodward is listed as one of the executive producers.

It's one of two new shows being developed around the scandal. Deadline reported that "Psych" actress Sarah Edmondson and her husband are shooting a documentary based on their break with NXIVM and returning to normal life. Edmondson was a key source for The New York Times story.

The news of two new series related to NXIVM comes after the dramatic arrest of the accused head of the cult, Keith Raniere, in Mexico in March. Extradited to the United States, he was charged with sex trafficking, sex trafficking conspiracy and forced labor conspiracy, and refused bail.

In April, Allison Mack, best known for her role as wholesome Chloe Sullivan on the teen superman drama "Smallville," was arrested and charged with sex trafficking and conspiracy to commit forced labor. Accused of being the second in command of the sex-trafficking cult, Mack was released on $5 million bail in New York last week.

Both were charged after the publication of Barry Meier's Times article, titled "Inside a Secretive Group Where Women Are Branded," which revealed a complex master and slave system where in a sinister twist, the group "brands" the women with Raniere's initials.

The NXIVM scandal is coming to the small screen.

Alongside Edmondson, dozens of women were interviewed for the article, including former "Dynasty" actress Catherine Oxenberg, who spoke out about her daughter's involvement in the group and concern for her wellbeing.

Her book, "Captive: A Mother's Crusade to Save Her Daughter from a Terrifying Cult," will be released in August; Deadline also reported a documentary is being developed based on the book — which, if headed for TV would make this the third series based on NXIVM to be developed.

While Meier's article did not identify Mack in the story, her subsequent arrest has garnered significant media coverage.

Mack's Twitter account reveals her attempts to contact and recruit various celebrities over the past years for the organization, including one tweet to Emma Watson claiming to represent a "unique human development & women's movement," as well as singer Kelly Clarkson, who she identified as a "Smallville" fan.

Fellow "Smallville" actress Kristin Kreuk was rumored to be involved in the group, but issued a statement on Twitter in March denying her involvement in any illegal activity.

George Takei is beaming up to Boston.

The "Star Trek" actor is coming to town to speak about what it was like to live in U.S. internment camps for Japanese-Americans during World War II at a Boston Public Library event on Tuesday night. Takei will take part in an hour long Q&A session at Central Library's Rabb Hall in Copley Square, beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Takei, who became a pop culture icon for his role as Mr. Sulu on "Star Trek," will also chat about his hit Broadway musical "Allegiance," which is based off of his childhood experiences at various relocation centers during WWII. Tuesday's event will include a performance by the cast of the SpeakEasy Stage Company's production of "Allegiance," which premiered earlier in May and runs through June 2.

The musical centers around the fictional Kimura family, who end up joining the 120,000 other Japanese-Americans that were forced to leave their homes in the aftermath of the attack on Pearl Harbor. Actor Sam Tanabe plays Sam Kimura in SpeakEasy's "Allegiance," a man who wants to prove his devotion to his country by fighting for the U.S. in the war. However, his sister Kei (Grace Yoo) isn't a fan of the decision as she objects to the U.S. government's treatment of Japanese-Americans.

"Allegiance" is described as an "uplifting testament to the power of the human spirit," featuring a family that must "choose between duty and defiance, custom and change, family bonds and forbidden loves."

Tickets to Tuesday's event are free, but are only available on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Ratings, reboots and rumors: The 'Roseanne' effect

What's old is new again as once-retired shows are rebooted for the golden age of TV.

HENRIETTA JONES
letters@metro.us

The "Roseanne" reboot has dominated the ratings. ABC

For five weeks running, the Season 10 "Roseanne" reboot has been a ratings winner for ABC, and its knockout success has television executives peering into the cupboard trying to figure out what old network faithful to dust off next.

In the current political climate, sitcoms seem to be a form of narrative comfort food for audiences, with the ratings success of reboots like "Will & Grace" and "Roseanne" indicating viewers are nostalgic for a time before the nastiness of reality TV dominated network schedules.

With 13 episodes on order, "Murphy Brown" remains one of the most highly anticipated reboots of 2018, with star Candice Bergen and creator Diane English revisiting the series that was so topical it raised the criticism of Vice President Dan Quayle at the time, leaving a strong cultural legacy.

Other fan favorites currently rumored to be in development include a revival of "Mad About You," staring Helen Hunt and Paul Reiser, with Hunt openly discussing the revival during a recent appearance on "The Ellen Show."

"We're talking about how to make it and not wreck it, because we're proud of what we did," she told DeGeneres.

Wrecking — and unwrecking — seems to be a key concern for most shows returning to the small screen. "Roseanne" has chosen to simply ignore the original shambolic Season 9 finale that saw Dan die; "Will & Grace" chose to make their finale storyline all a bad dream — both shows ended up poking fun at their own narrative flip-floppery. Viewers, thrilled with the return of their TV favorites, willfully ignored the gaps in plot.

Other shows, like the four-episode Netflix special "Gilmore Girls: A Year in the Life" offered fans a chance to temper the ills of a horror final season (Luke's random daughter, anyone?) and creator Amy Sherman-Palladino a chance to air those final magic words she teased for years. However, while those four words were worth waiting for, the show unintentionally exposed just how woefully unlikeable one of its key characters really was.

There's no doubt that fan loyalty drove Netflix's "Gilmore Girls" revival, but it wasn't the first show Netflix breathed new life into: In 2013, cult classic "Arrested Development" was one of the best all-cast returns; a new season is promised for later in 2018.

But fans can be fickle and not all revivals find success; "Dallas," "Dynasty" and "Lost in Space" have had lukewarm responses, while some reboots flounder. The only certainty? It's really only a matter of when, not if, your favorite high-rating shows will be back.

Rick Nash celebrates with Brad Marchand during the Bruins recent playoff run . GETTY IMAGES

B's with quest to become great

Three things the Bruins need to improve on this offseason.

RICH SLATE
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

The 2017-18 season was an unexpectedly successful one for the Bruins.

They nearly captured the Atlantic Division crown, they won a playoff series for the first time in four years, and they had the look of a true Cup contender at many points. Then they ran into the Tampa Bay Lightning, who knocked them out in five mostly stress-free contests. This past season should serve as a great lesson for many of Boston's promising young players.

One of the biggest takeaways for the team, however, is that there is still a sizable gap between them and the truly elite clubs in the league, like Tampa Bay. Here are three areas that the Bruins should be focusing on now that the offseason has abruptly arrived.

1 Team speed

One of the reasons that Boston had so much trouble with Toronto in the first round of the playoffs (going seven games with the Leafs before they survived in Game 7 at TD Garden) is because of their team-wide speed. Having so many young players improved the Bruins' speed, but against the Lightning that was one of the most notable differences between the clubs. That is where the NHL has gone in the last few years, with an emphasis on speed, skating ability and stickhandling skills. Boston has started to realize this fact but it still has plenty of work to do in this regard to catch up with the other top teams.

2 Better defensemen

The Bruins had better defensemen than the Maple Leafs. That is an easy explanation for why they were able to ultimately beat them. However, when they matched up with Tampa Bay (which has one of the deepest defensive corps in the NHL), Boston didn't have a chance. Of course, it didn't help that Brandon Carlo got hurt once again in the regular season finale for the second year in a row and that Torey Krug (3 goals, 9 assists in 11 games) left in Game 4 vs. Tampa Bay with a severe ankle injury. Still, do you think that they regret leaving Colin Miller (2 goals, 1 assist) exposed in the expansion draft? He's off to the Western Conference Final with the Golden Knights.

3 Secondary scoring

All season, we sung the praises of Brad Marchand (4 goals, 13 assists), Patrice Bergeron (6 goals, 10 assists) and David Pastrnak (6 goals, 14 assists). They were almost universally hailed as the best forward line in the NHL. Looking at their statistics, those guys all brought it in the postseason. But the problem for Boston is that the same can't be said for many of their other three forward lines. In fact, after the Bruins scored six goals in the shockingly easy 6-2 Game 1 victory, Tampa Bay clamped down and held them to only seven combined goals in the remaining four contests.

Boston actually had the top-ranked power play in the 2018 playoffs, clicking at an absurd rate of 36.4 percent, but that brushed aside the fact that they were awful 5-on-5. In the season-ending Game 5 loss to Tampa Bay, the B's scored first on a David Krejci power-play goal, but the Lightning tied it on a Brayden Point 5-on-5 goal, followed by a J.T. Miller power play strike. Anton Stralman iced it with a power play goal.

Rookie Jake DeBrusk (6 goals, 2 assists) had a solid first postseason, but Rick Nash (3 goals, 2 assists) predictably flopped in his first playoffs with the spoked B. Krejci (3 goals, 7 assists) always ratchets his game up this time of season so he needs another reliable winger around him — which should help the Bruins advance further.

Sox - Yanks back in a big way

Previewing the monstrous three-game series between New York and Boston this week.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The last time the Yankees faced the Red Sox, the series was headlined by a benches-clearing brawl. GETTY IMAGES

Grab the popcorn, pull up a chair and maybe brush up on your karate because the New York Yankees and Boston Red Sox are at it again this week with a three-game series in the Bronx starting Tuesday night.

While there is always a little extra attention set on the best rivalry in Major League Baseball, regardless of how either team is performing in the standings, the second matchup of the 2018 season between these two sides is an absolute doozy.

The Red Sox (25-9) and Yankees (24-10), hold the best records in Major League Baseball, New York trailing Boston by a single game in the American League East. This is the latest point of an MLB season in which both the Yankees and Red Sox have a winning percentage over .700.

The division leaders have used winning streaks of nine and eight games respectively to get off to their best start in franchise history. A stretch in which they dropped seven of 12 games dating from April 21 to May 6 did slow things down, but Alex Cora and Co. have steadied things after sweeping a three-game series from the Texas Rangers over the weekend.

They have an explosive offense which ranks second in the majors in team batting average to thank for their start. Boston's lineup contains four players with batting averages of .333 or higher, but Mookie Betts and J.D. Martinez have been the engine fueling the Red Sox.

Betts is slashing .355/.434/.818 with 13 home runs and 26 RBI through 30 games while Martinez, brought on via free agency this offseason, is batting .349/.396/.619 with eight round-trippers and 27 RBI.

There is some concern surrounding Betts though as he is day-to-day with a shoulder contusion after being struck in the shoulder with a ball.

While the Red Sox have methodically built the league's best record over the first 34 games this season, the Yankees have been absolutely scorching as of late. The Pinstripes have put together their best stretch since 1980, winning 15 of their last 16 games to eliminate any concerns surrounding a mediocre 9-9 start.

In a lineup that features Giancarlo Stanton — who still has not completely shaken some horrific early-season struggles — the .198 hitting Gary Sanchez and Aaron Judge, Didi Gregorius has proven to be the most valuable bat in New York's nine.

Aries How you help others will make a difference. Don't neglect your responsibilities when covering for someone else. Show others the way, but don't do the work for them.

Taurus Keep busy and refuse to let your emotions cause you to overreact. Consider all angles of a situation and recognize that what works for you may not work for someone else.

Gemini Listen to sound advice and consider your options before you make an assumption or take action. Personal change will be rewarding and help you avoid an argument.

Cancer Don't feel obliged to be a follower or let fear of failure drive your actions. Create your own opportunities and use your imagination to help you bring your ideas to life.

Leo Keep personal matters in check and don't let your emotions hinder your productivity or get in the way of you meeting your responsibilities.

Virgo Attend functions that will give you better insight into future trends. Staying on top of industry requirements will ensure that you don't miss a chance to advance.

Libra Live and learn. Get out and do things that will open your mind to different cultures and lifestyles. Someone close to you will feel threatened by your changing attitude.

Scorpio Doing things your way can be daunting for someone who loves you. Share with close friends and family or include them in your plans to gain support and avoid complaints.

Sagittarius Relationship problems will be based on hearsay. Make your position clear and share the changes you want to see happen. Evasiveness will lead to a misunderstanding.

Capricorn Watch what others do instead of taking part. Avoid unnecessary arguments or joint ventures that could be unpredictable. Concentrate on stability and domestic security.

Aquarius Revisiting the past will help you change the future. Old friends, memories and experiences will shape what's to come. Romance will encourage a better personal life.

Pisces Don't let sorrow take charge or cause you to retreat. Strength and courage, along with truth and integrity, will lead to greater opportunity and better relationships. EUGENIA LAST
